

Internal Security Method for a Relational Database System

Abstract

5 An internal security method for use with a relational database system is disclosed. The method is incorporated into a database system such that there is no need for security coding be layered on top of the system application software to prevent unauthorized access to restricted database information. The method of the present invention includes at least two embodiments and at least one of the embodiments has a “down the tree view” structure.

10